

Factory.

The Bucklin block, occupied by the Chinese Laundry was totally destroyed, and the house north of it suffered, while the boarding-houses south of it were greatly injured. Flying bricks and bits of boards broke much of the glass in front of the Occidental. The Everhart house was literally closed up in front by a tin roof from one of the buildings opposite, which was wrapped around the whole front of the house.

The barn at the rear of the Everhart